Freixenet, gigante de cava hispano-alemán, vela por el empleo en Cataluña frente a la sequía

Freixenet, conocido por sus botellas de vino espumoso en cristal negro con etiqueta distintiva, ha anunciado el aplazamiento temporal del 80% de su plantilla en Cataluña, como respuesta a la sequía que dura más de tres años y ha perjudicado gravemente la producción de uva en la región nororiental de España.

La medida, que afectará aproximadamente a 615 de los 778 trabajadores de la compañía en Cataluña, entrará en vigor en mayo.

"Esta medida, adoptada a la luz de las circunstancias actuales, tiene como objetivo garantizar el funcionamiento del negocio y mantener la empleabilidad para hacer frente a factores externos y fuerzas mayores, como la grave sequía", afirmó la empresa en un comunicado.

La empresa ha enviado el plan de reducción de plantilla al gobierno regional y a los representantes laborales y señaló que "será variable en función de la temporada y de la evolución de las causas que lo han provocado”.

El cambio climático ha hecho visible su impacto a lo largo y ancho de España en los últimos años, provocando incendios forestales letales, afectando a la producción de productos tradicionales como el aceite de oliva y el vino, y llevando a la desecación de las zonas húmedas sobrexplotadas en el sur.

El gobierno español aprobó el año pasado un plan sin precedentes de €2.2 mil millones para ayudar a los agricultores y consumidores a hacer frente a la sequía persistente.

La sequía en Cataluña ha forzado al gobierno regional a declarar un estado de emergencia y las autoridades han introducido una serie de restricciones en el uso del agua que afectarán a seis millones de personas.
