Simone Biles continues to win gold medals at the Olympic Games

Simone Biles is starting to be a bit older for this. Maybe it's not too old to continue. Maybe.

Minutes after she, the American gymnast, won her seventh Olympic gold medal in the vault final on Saturday in an event that clearly showed that even at 27 years old she remains a class, she showed evasiveness when asked if this was the last time she would compete from the trampoline.

Although Biles admitted that she would officially retire from her eponymous vault Yurchenko double pike because "really, it's the end" at the Paris Olympic Games, she did not rule out a return to the Games when they move to Los Angeles in 2028.

"I never know", said Biles. "The next Olympic Games are at home. As you never know. I'm really getting old."

Sometimes, it's difficult to say. After winning the gold in the individual event and helping the U.S. to a dominant victory in the team event, Simone Biles won her third gold medal in five days on Saturday.

During the last Olympic cycles, women's artistic gymnastics has experienced a significant change. The average age of the best competitors has increased and a number of big names enjoyed long careers.

When LA is held in 2028, Biles will be 31 years old. Maria Gorokhovskaya is the oldest gymnast to win the title in an event, taking the gold at 30 years old in 1952 for the Soviet Union. It's not that making history would be something new for Biles — she is the second oldest gymnast to win the title in an event. The Hungarian Ágnes Keleti continued to win gold medals in individual events at 35 years old.

Biles is not the only American gymnast who could have her eyes on 2028.

Jade Carey, 24 years old, was surpassed by the Brazilian Rebeca Andrade in the vault. It's not that Carey is complaining. Three years after tripping during the vault final and finishing last, Carey won the "redemption" she was looking for when she announced her Olympic return.

"Quería probarme a mí misma que puedo hacer dos saltos en la final", dijo Carey. "(Para) caminar con la medalla es realmente especial para mí".

Los Juegos Olímpicos de Carey han terminado. Los de Biles no. Tendrá dos oportunidades más para aumentar su botín de medallas en París en las finales de barra de equilibrio y suelo el lunes. Y con un juego en casa, ella puede ir más allá de eso.
