Cena alternativa da literatura americana chega ao Reino Unido

A cena literária alternativa da internet, que teve origem nos EUA na década de 2000 e nunca realmente se espalhou pelo Reino Unido, acumulou um certo tipo de glamour insurgente, com seu estilo desleixado e indiferente a métricas primárias de poesia e empatia. Muitos dos títulos canônicos - como what purpose did i serve in your life?, de Marie Calloway, e L iveblog, de Megan Boyle - vieram da editora independente Tyrant, fundada por Giancarlo DiTrapano. DiTrapano morreu jogar bacará 2024, mas deixou um legado de protegidos promissores, como Sean Thor Conroe (Fuccbo), Gabriel Smith e Honor Levy.

Uma coleção jittery de humor de mau gosto

O livro de estreia de Levy, My First Book, é uma coleção de reflexões sobre os detritos digitais do pós-Trump, repleta de humor de mau gosto e choque valorizado pelo Xanax ("Quando eu tinha 12 anos, assisti decapitações antes da jantar"). Suas narradoras usam jogar bacará privilégio de forma desafiante, mas às vezes com humor ("Quando eu crescer, vou controlar os meios de comunicação ou os bancos, mas primeiro vou estudar literatura comparada ou novos meios de comunicação ou Nietzsche, como meu irmão fez na NYU").

Um autor e seus fantasmas

Gabriel Smith também sabe o valor da audácia. Recentemente, ele chamou a atenção ao postar online que a cantora Charli XCX pediu para usar o título de seu livro de estreia, Brat, para seu novo álbum, quando claramente não o fez (clássico shenanigans da literatura alternativa). Seu texto-chave é o terror de espelhos Lunar Park, não a desilusão despojada de Less Than Zero.

O livro de Smith, Brat, segue um jovem autor bloqueado - Gabriel, claro - que se muda de volta para a casa da família, sozinho, para supervisionar a venda depois da morte de seu pai. Então as coisas ficam estranhas à noite. Sua pele começa a descam
