Canal de envío principal de Baltimore reabre completamente después del colapso de la autopista

The main shipping channel in the port of Baltimore has returned to full depth and width after the collapse of the Francis Scott Key Expressway on March 26, which blocked most of the maritime traffic in the port.

Port officials announced the complete reopening in a press release on Monday night. It comes after a massive cleanup effort that saw crews remove an estimated 50,000 tons of steel and concrete from the Patapsco River.

The channel was blocked by debris from the collapsed highway, which fell into the water after a container ship lost power and crashed into one of its support columns, killing six workers. All the victims were Latin immigrants who worked night shifts to fill potholes on the bridge.

The port of Baltimore, which processes more automobiles and agricultural equipment than any other in the country, was effectively closed for several weeks as officials worked to clear the debris. Crews managed to reopen sections of the deep-water channel in stages, restoring some commercial traffic in the weeks leading up to the reopening.

On May 20, the cargo ship Dali was refloated and guided back to the port. The ship had been stuck in the debris for nearly two months, with a large steel beam resting on its damaged hull.

After the Dali was moved, officials opened a channel that is 15 meters (50 feet) deep and 122 meters (400 feet) wide. The full federal navigation channel is 213 meters (700 feet) wide, which means that two-way traffic can resume, officials said. They also noted that other safety requirements have been met due to the increased width.

Thousands of dockworkers, truckers and small business owners who were affected by the collapse are now looking forward to the reopening of the port and the restoration of normal traffic. Local and state officials are prioritizing the reopening to help ease the economic impact of the disaster.

The Monday announcement means that the commerce that depends on the busy port can now get back on track.

The Dali lost power shortly after leaving Baltimore for Sri Lanka in the first horas del 26 de marzo. Una investigación de la Junta de Seguridad en el Transporte Nacional encontró que experimentó apagones antes de comenzar su viaje, pero las causas exactas de los problemas eléctricos aún no se han determinado.

El FBI también está llevando a cabo una investigación criminal sobre las circunstancias que condujeron al colapso. Los funcionarios han dicho que esperan reconstruir el puente para 2028.
